Changes in the population of CD-34 positive cells in the bone marrow of patients with multiple myeloma after high-dose treatment with cytostatic drugs. The changes in the population of CD-34-positive cells (CD-34+ cells) in the bone marrow of patients with multiple myeloma were evaluated by flow cytometry before, after and at the end of treatment with high-dose cytostatic drugs. Blood samples were obtained prior to the administration of cytostatic drugs (baseline sample), during the cytopenic phase after treatment and at recovery from the hematopoietic depression (HDP) phase. The percentage and number of CD-34+ cells were lower in the bone marrow of patients with multiple myeloma before cytostatic treatment than in the bone marrow of normal controls. In patients with multiple myeloma, before treatment, the number of CD-34+ cells in the bone marrow was correlated with the percentage of myeloma cells. The decrease in the number of CD-34+ cells in the bone marrow of patients with multiple myeloma was associated with the decrease in the percentage of myeloma cells. Thus, the number of CD-34+ cells decreased in the bone marrow of patients with multiple myeloma before treatment and increased as the percentage of myeloma cells returned to normal. In patients with multiple myeloma, the decrease in the number of CD-34+ cells in the bone marrow was associated with an increase in serum levels of interleukin-6 and granulocyte colony-stimulating factor (G-CSF) during the cytopenic phase of the disease, which is a characteristic of these cytokines. In patients with multiple myeloma the percentage of CD-34+ cells in the bone marrow increased during the HDP phase and correlated with the percentage of myeloma cells. However, in patients with multiple myeloma, the number of CD-34+ cells in the bone marrow was not correlated with the percentage of plasma cells at the recovery from the HDP phase. A modified method to reduce the contamination of Mycobacterium tuberculosis (bacilli) from sputum to culture media: comparison with the standard method. The contamination of Mycobacterium tuberculosis (MTB) from sputum to culture media is a common observation in most microbiology laboratories. The standard method of decontamination requires the addition of paraformaldehyde (PFA) and amphotericin

Q: How to handle date-time range using CASE in MySQL? I have 2 columns in my MySQL table which is : 1. create_date 2. effective_date Both the column contains date-time For example : create_date effective_date 2019-10-07 14:50:02 2019-10-09 10:54:38 2019-10-07 10:54:40 2019-10-09 10:56:55 2019-10-09 10:57:06 2019-10-09 10:56:43 2019-10-10 09:59:10 2019-10-09 10:56:34 I need to write a query which should return the rows where create_date = '2019-10-07' In the output the 2nd row must be removed. Since the row has the same create_date as effective_date. A: Try this: SELECT * FROM your_table WHERE create_date = '2019-10-07'; If you really need and hour as a condition, use my SQL function: WHERE datetime_field BETWEEN DATE('2019-10-07') AND CURRENT_TIMESTAMP(23:59:59) See more: MySQL function to convert date/time from 'yyyy-mm-dd' to 'h:m:s' Golf is a popular sports activity. For golf players, what is needed is a shot control aid which provides a golf player with improved accuracy in the game. One problem that occurs in golf is that golf balls are often carried forward on a golf swing and can inadvertently be struck with some force by the golf player. These inadvertently struck golf balls have the tendency to roll, spin, and/or bounce off a golf club, and hence, the golf player does not know where a correctly struck golf ball is to be located. Thus, the golf player may have to search for the golf ball. This practice of searching for the golf ball can cause problems as the golfer loses track of his direction. Another problem caused by this situation is that the golf player may accidentally hit the golf ball with the golf club. This is undesirable as the golf club can mar the
