Suppose that it is interesting to know whether a periodic point belongs to an attractor, but not its position in the attractor. What are some interesting subclasses of the periodic points? A few examples: Given any attractor, is there a periodic point that is asymptotically stable? Given any system, is there a periodic point that is super-stable? i.e. perturbations from other periodic points eventually shrink to the periodic point. Is there any other interesting notion of a super-stable periodic point? A: Here are two analogous cases where the answer is negative: 1) Given any C^2 Anosov map with a finite number of attracting periodic points, there is a periodic point that is asymptotically stable. 2) Given any C^1 Anosov map with a finite number of attracting periodic points, there is a periodic point that is hyperbolic. For the latter, we note that any of the periodic points is unstable. Q: 2D vectors and friend constructor I have a friends class and a vector which should be intialised in the constructor. Example: friend class friends; friend class friends::vector2D; class friends{ public: friends(); friends(double side); private: std::vector location; } friend class friends::vector2D; class vector2D{ public: vector2D(double x

If you used all the compost and forage you grew last year, you can put down some silage this season. If you did not, then you need to buy some silage mix. You can use topsoil or bagged soil and that should be used if you want to add anything to the silage. I use mine with a significant amount of straw. If you are going to add anything to your silage base and you don't want to run the risk of creating a long term problem by adding soil, you can put on some straw. That goes in at the beginning of the season and it will break down over time. _____ _____ With thanks to Harry_Ratcliffe, Riccardo, Dwayne Mike, Thanks for that. I bought two bags of soil, last time I tried to make silage with it, it created a pretty bad taste in my mouth. It was alot of work and tasted like a farm type of base. Not sure that we will give it a try again. Thanks for the info Dwayne, I also tried it with all-purpose fertilizer(not alfalfa), but didn't like the taste. It does seem to work when using straw. I'll give it another try in the spring. I use alfalfa and soybean meal (50% soybean meal) and add ground limestone. I lay down the bag of compost (that I took from last years garden) and it sits for about 2 weeks to work it into the soil. I use 5 bags of compost this year. I keep using the same 5 bags of compost until the worms have eaten most all of the compost. Then I compost all my forage and add the compost and soymeal.Q: Describe when a function $f\colon\Bbb R^2\to \Bbb R$ is constant I have this doubt here: Describe when a function $f\colon\Bbb R^$ e79caf774b
