This study was aimed at assessing the prevalence of AVFs in children receiving regular haemodialysis, its relation to age and sex, and the availability of cephalic vein in this group of patients. Methods Children receiving regular haemodialysis treatment were studied. The most frequent primary cause of end stage renal failure was the diagnosis of neurogenic bladder. The prevalence of AVFs was assessed, as well as the location of the fistula, the predominant veins used for its formation and the cephalic veins available for use. Results 51 patients received regular haemodialysis treatment over a period of 11 years. Prevalence of AVFs was 50%. The age ranged between 4 and 17 years (median 12.5). The male to female ratio was 1:3.1. In 29 patients (56%) cephalic vein was available and was the preferred vein for fistula formation. In 21 cases (41%) multiple fistulas were reported. The brachiocephalic was most frequently used for formation of AVFs (34%). Conclusions The study reports the prevalence of AVFs in children receiving regular haemodialysis treatment, as well as the utilisation of cephalic vein in fistula formation. Brachiocephalic fistulas are mostly used, usually as a single fistula, depending on the availability of cephalic vein. Multiple fistulas are often present. In children with neurogenic bladder, the prevalence of AVFs is high and cephalic vein is the preferred vein for forming fistula. Physiological and haematological responses of Ostrea edulis to increased loadings. The physiological and haematological responses of the European flat oyster Ostrea edulis to increased mechanical disturbance from an artificial stroboscopic wave were examined. Two groups of experiments were performed; the first group of experiments (n=16) examined the 595f342e71
